

Scientia Advisors launches life science "knowledge network"

I'm pleased to announce that Scientia Advisors has launched ScientiaNET, a "knowledge network" for health care and the life sciences. (True, they are my client, but I AM pleased).

The network now has 10 thousand member/experts and is seeking additional ones. Members are leading scientists, physicians, practitioners, academics and industry professionals who are paid their hourly rates to provide Scientia and its clients with analyses, opinions, surveys and consultation on life science tools and technologies, medical devices, diagnostics, biotechnology, pharmaceuticals, functional foods, and regulatory issues.

The member/experts typically consult with business leaders and decision-makers on industry trends and developments, operational problems/solutions, or specific products/services.

If you'd like to become a ScientiaNET member or engage one (or many) please visit www.scientiaadv.com.

AMH

Scientia Advisors, based in Cambridge, MA and Palo Alto, CA, is a global management consulting firm specializing in strategic growth and operational strategies for major and emerging companies in health care and the life sciences.

New Cambridge Observer is a publication of the Harris Communications Group of Cambridge, MA.