

Seeking a Vublisher for my Vook

As an author, former radio and TV producer, and communications consultant, I was excited to read about “Vooks”—a hybrid “literary” form that merges text, Web and video features—in the New York Times.

Although most of the highbrows who commented online were skeptical or negative about new vook ventures by Simon and Schuster and others, I’m thrilled—as I’ve been struggling to cram 4 years worth of my LOL college diaries into linear form—along with memories buttressed by videotapes and photos of concerts and political demonstrations I was delighted to find online.

I’m excited to be able integrate a myriad of forms that will allow me to share my experiences and my peers’ with my readers—er—viewers—er—surfers. Oh, heck. My audience, if I can figure out how to find one!

BTW—my book in progress is called Ithaca Diaries, and I’d love for you to suggest possible agents or vublishers.

See my blog on the Times article and commenters at HarrisCombog.com

Anita M. Harris

New Cambridge Observer is a publication of the Harris Communications Group of Cambridge, MA. We also publish HarrisCombog.