

The View From Third Street, Harrisburg has launched!

The View From Third Street

I'm ecstatic to report that at my new book, The View From Third Street is

,
at
lo ng
la st
,
av
ai
la
bl
e on
Am
az
on
.
It
's an un
co
nv
en
ti
on
al
me
mo ir
of my ex
pe
ri
en
ce

s as a
co
fo
un
de r
of
a we ek
ly
al
te rn
at
iv
e ne ws
pa
pe
r ca ll
ed
th e Ha
rr
is bu rg
In
de
pe

nd
en
t Pr
es
s
(A KA
HI
P)
in
co
nj
un
ct
io n wi th
th e 19 72
tr
ia
l
of
th
e Ha
rr
is
bu
rg
Se
ve
n.

Long story, but in that iconic trial, a group of anti-war nurses and priests were am

on
g
th os
e ac
cu
se
d
of
co
ns
pi
ri ng
to ki
dn
ap
He
nr
y Ki
ss
in ge r
an d bl ow
up
un
de
rg
ro
un

d
he
at
in g tu
nn
el
s
in
Wa
sh
in
gt
on
,
DC
.

The book has three main sections: the first starts with the founding and (often) muckraking reportage of the paper, the second focuses on the trial, and the third ends with a massive flood. It's all tied together with the personal story of a young woman (moi) named Ani (the first three letters of my first name, conveniently, mean "I" in Hebrew). A member of my writers group urged me to use a different name because Ani is also a breed of "cuckoobird" but what the heck.

Anyway, at this point, I'd like to thank the friends, family members, librarians, historians— and the team at Henrietta's Cafe in Harvard Square— who helped me research and edit the book—and who put up with me—er, I mean, encouraged me over the years it took me to write it.

I started working on The View From Third Street just as DJT was coming into office—thinking that there might be some parallels between his divisive reign and Nixon's. Little did I know how tumultuous things would eventually become. I spent several years time-travelling—which was great, during the pandemic. I’d occasionally come up for air, look around, ask, “Is this still going on?” and head back to the 1970s. Now I seem to be pretty much living in the present, and hoping our nation will get back on track.

In the meantime, I’ll be posting here, writing articles, and letting you know about the book’s progress. And about the next one’s ...and about the one after that.

If you’d like to receive email updates, please sign up to the left of this chunk—or email me at anita.m.harris at comcast dot net. Oh, and if you want to buy the book—click here!

—Anita M. Harris

Anita M. Harris is a writer, photographer and communications consultant based in Cambridge, Mass. More information about her, her work and her books is available at <http://anitamharris.com>.

New Cambridge Observer is a publication of the Harris Communications Group, also in Cambridge, Mass.