

“Vessel Re-Imagined” at Lacoste Keane, Concord, MA.

Anita Harris much enjoyed “Vessel Reimagined,” a ceramics exhibit shedding new light on a 20,000 year-old-form, at Lacoste Keane Gallery, in Concord, MA.

Concord’s Lacoste/Keane to Feature Rafa Perez August 3-24, 2019

On Chance and Materiality: sculptor Rafa Pérez’s first East Coast exhibition

I’m looking forward to East Coast solo exhibit of the Spanish sculptor Rafa Perez—to be held from 3-5 pm at the Lacoste/Keane Gallery, 25 Main Street, Concord, MA, on August 3, 2019.

Born in 1957 in Haro, La Rioja, Spain, Perez studied ceramics at the Massana School of Art and Design in Barcelona. According to a gallery press release, he has been making abstract sculptures for over 30 years.

Though prolific and well exhibited in Europe, Pérez has been largely under represented in the United States –his only previous US solo show was at Minnesota State University in 2018.

Perez's work is the result of two important factors – his masterful handling of the clay body while letting the unpredictability of the firing be an active participant in the process. This is achieved by mixing his own clay body and experimenting with firing temperatures. It is the element of surprise that motivates him to continuously tests materials until he is satisfied, he wrote, "I try to keep a balanced relation with the fire. I mean the fire has to work by its own as I do, but finally we are a team." In the work Untitled #8, 2014 (pictured), Perez applied his own special formula of glaze on wire mesh which crawls during firing, giving the piece a dramatic affect.

Lucy Lacoste, the founder of our gallery surmises, "I have been watching Rafa Pérez's career for some time and to me, he is exciting because of his handling of the materials which is innovative and unorthodox much like Jackson Pollock or Jasper Johns."

Born in 1957 in Haro, La Rioja, Spain Perez studied ceramics at the Although prolific and well exhibited in Europe, says Lacoste/Keane founder and co-owner Lucy Lacoste. "He has been largely under represented in the United States –his only previous US solo show was at the Minnesota State University in 2018."

Lacoste describes Pérez's work as the result of two important factors: "... his masterful handling of the clay body and the unpredictability of the firing, which becomes an active participant in the process. This is achieved by mixing his own clay body and experimenting with firing temperatures. It is the element of surprise that motivates him to continuously tests materials until he is satisfied. “

Perez writes “I try to keep a balanced relation with the fire. I mean the fire has to work by its own as I do, but finally we are a team.”

In the work Untitled #8, 2014 (pictured), Perez applied his own special formula of glaze on wire mesh which crawls during firing, giving the piece a dramatic affect.

Lacoste says, “I have been watching Rafa Pérez’s career for some time and to me, he is exciting because of his handling of the materials which is innovative and unorthodox– much like Jackson Pollock or Jasper Johns.”

An opening reception with Rafa Pérez will be held on Saturday August 3, 3:00 – 5:00 pm, with an artist talk on Sunday August 4, 2:00-4:00 pm. For details call 978-369-0278 or email info@lacostekeane.com.

HIP

STAFFERS

LAUNCH

KICKSTARTER TO PRESERVE 1970s ALTERNATIVE NEWSPAPER FOR FUTURE GENERATIONS

Before Watergate, before Woodward and Bernstein, before the Internet and before the current President's attacks on the free press, author Anita Harris helped found a weekly independent newspaper. She urges you to contribute to a Kickstarter to preserve that newspaper for future generations.

Ceramics-painting dialogue makes Lacoste/Keane Gallery an artwork in itself

Anita Harris writes that the dialogue between ceramics and painting established in Lacoste Keane's new exhibit makes the gallery a work of art in itself.

Vietnam Vet & author Dick Pirozzolo says vets are good hires

For Veterans Day, 2018, author and Air Force Vet Dick Pirozzolo explains why people who have served in armed forces make great employees—and urges employers to hire them.